and most private insurance plans.

Multidisciplinary Team of Experts

In simplest terms, hospice is a type of care focused on providing comfort for a patient with a terminal condition that has less than six months to live.

In practice, hospice seeks to provide comfort using a multidisciplinary team to support the patient and their family during this challenging time.

This approach includes a clinical team that sees to the patient's physical comfort through medication and various other palliative (comfort-based) treatments.

A spiritual/mental support team helps the patient and their family make the best of their remaining time and prepare for the eventuality of death and its aftermath.
